Local and General

Mrs. S. Collins returned home on Friday afternoon last. She is yet far from well, but we are pleased to report she is doing very satisfactory.

Merrick Thomas has been confined to the house the last few days with an attack of la grippe.

Mr. A. R. Thomas and D. Ontkes paid a business trip to the city on Monday last.

The Rev. H. M. Horricks paid a trip to Calgary on Monday evening to take in Dr. Bland's lecture.

S. Fleming has just purchased a J.I. Case Gasoline Tractor and a 3-bottom plow outfit. It looks as if Sam means business.

The notice in our columns last week re Dog Licenses swelled the village coffers this week.

Mrs. Woleg and Eddie took in the delights of the city on Tuesday.

A large congregation assembled at the Union Church on Sunday last. Mr. H. J. Adames, Grand Treasurer of the Grand Lodge of Alberta, was the speaker on the Odd-Fellows anniversary, and Mr. A. R. Thomas spoke a few words on the battle of St. Julien. The flag was flying on the Fire Hall in commemoration of our gallant Canadians who fell in this battle.

The Ladies' Rest Room is now open over the U.F.A. Office. The ladies of the Rodney Branch of the U.F.W.A. wish to announce to the farm women of the surrounding district that this room is for their convenience and hope they will use it, the key may be had at the U.F.A. office.

On behalf of the Rodney U.F.W.A. Mrs. W. J. McKay, Mrs. and Miss Jarvis, Mrs. Myles Haynes and Mrs. James Millar, put in quite a busy day in Crossfield last week. They were cleaning and preparing the Ladies' Rest Room prior to opening. They report a hard time on their homeward journey, wagons, hayracks, cars, etc., all stuck in the mud on the north road between Stoney Creek and Rosebud. This road being in a deplorable condition.

It has been rumoured that Hugh McBean was leaving Crossfield at an early date, it is not so. He will travel this season with the Standard Bred Stallion Tom Wood Jr. as usual.

Double Anniversary

Large Gathering at the Union Church

The Union Church was taxed to its utmost capacity last Sunday afternoon to accommodate the congregation assembled to commemorate the Odd-Fellows Anniversary and the anniversary of St. Julien. Bright singing was led by the choir and orchestra and a special number "Remember Me," was rendered by the Odd-Fellows male quartette.

The story of the good Samaritan was read from Luke 10: 25-37.

The chaplain, Rev. H. M. Horrocks spoke particularly to those who were not Odd-Fellows, and who might be anxious to know something of the origin and purpose of the order. Anticipating the stock questions put to one settling in a new community, viz.:

1. Where do you come from?
2. What do you work at?
3. Where do you live?

First.—Great antiquity has been claimed for the origin of the Odd-Fellows. The most popular tradition ascribing it to the Jewish Legion under Titus, who it is asserted, received from the Emperor its first charter, written on a golden tablet. Odd-fellows themselves, however, now generally admit that the institution cannot be traced back beyond the first half of the 18th century, and explain the name as adopted at a time when the severance into sects and classes was so wide that persons aiming at social union and mutual help were a marked exception to the general rule. The oldest lodge of which the name has been handed down is the Loyal Aristarchus, No. 9, which met in 1745, at Oakley Arms, Borough of Southwark, England.

In 1813, at a convention in Manchester, England, was formed the Independent Order of Odd-Fellows. The Odd-Fellows was introduced into the United States from Manchester Unity in 1819, and the Grand Lodge of Maryland and United States was formed Feb. 22nd, 1821. In 1843 it issued a dispensation for the opening of the Prince of Wales Lodge, No. 1, Montreal, Canada.

Organizations of Odd-Fellows have been founded in France, Germany, Switzerland, Gibraltar and Malta, Australia, New Zealand, Fiji Islands, The Hawaiian Islands, South Africa, South America the West Indies, Barbados and elsewhere, and to-day the Odd-Fellows have the largest membership of any friendly society in the world.

Second.—What do we do? Of the many scripture texts which might be quoted to give an idea of the principles and work of our Order I prefer to quote from Mark 12 and 30: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind and with all thy strength, this is the first commandment and the second is like it, namely this; thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

We not only believe in a Supreme Being, but we believe that man should have friendly relations with Him and in love for God and our fellow men, we find the grand remedy for all social evil and the only basis of good toward God or man.

Third.—Where do we live? I believe I can tell you this best in the words of Sam. Fox:

"Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
Where the tribes of men go by;
The man who are good, and the men who are bad,
As good and as bad as I.
I would not sit in the corner's seat
Nor hurl the cynic's ban.
Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
And be a friend to man."

Mr. H. J. Adams, Grand Treasurer of the Grand Lodge of Alberta, spoke at some length of the work being done by the Order in Alberta. He spoke of the Odd-Fellows Home, which looks toward providing for the members of the order in old age, and made a strong plea for this phase of the work on account of the many Odd-Fellows now serving with the Overseas Forces who will come back maimed

CHAPTER VII.

The Love of a Dog

A day or two passed, and the Squire had not seen Mrs. Bartlett. He had been engrossed by other matters. The neighborhood was agog with a new sensation. One day, when Sir Gilbert South had gone up to London by an early morning train, Lady South and Margaret had driven to the station about the hour later, and had also departed for London, taking with them a couple of trunks. They had not returned.

Mrs. Ellison, Mrs. De Montmorency, and their kind were in high excitement over so choice a bit of scandal. The social gatherings of Silverdale were enlivened beyond expectation by the eager flood of conjecture, of assumption, which the gossip poured out when they were met together.

"For once," said Mrs. De Montmorency, pulling up the Squire, and keeping him standing by her pony carriage, palpably ill at ease, "it amused Mrs. Montmorency to shock the Squire—for can he not say of Silverdale that it does not talk. We can hardly wait to hear each other."

The Squire looked down with the unhappy expression he often wore in Mrs. De Montmorency's society. He found it hard to rebuke a woman. She mimicked him very well indeed, to the huge delight of some of her friends.

"I wish it would find something better to talk about," he said, "I believe there is nothing to talk about. What affair is it of ours if Lady South and her daughter go away together? I wonder they have not gone long ago. If there was such a thing as a Society for the Protection of Wives and Daughters it would have had to take up Lady South's case."

He went away gloomily. He insisted on believing, but he could not make other people believe. And after all, there was the trouble in his own mind about the things he had seen. Above all that meeting with Lady South and Mr. Langton, or whatever the man's name was, in that out-of-the-way street in North London, the arm-in-arm—all very well for the class that usually frequented those streets, but said the same in his class or Lady South's. There had been a preposterous air of love-midnight-class domesticity about it, more preposterous because the man was obviously a gentleman, and no one could mistake Lady South for anything but a lady. He wondered where Margaret had been at that moment, when she was not keeping guard.

The thought of Margaret made him wince; then his lips tightened. No, no, no; the thought of Margaret forbade any evil interpretation of the queer, mysterious happening. The last time he had met Margaret she had looked at him with bright, defiant eyes—eyes without guile. The eyes had said: "I am doing something you disapprove of. I do not care. All I shall continue to do is to love and to be true. It must be all right. The thought of the girl forbade any evil interpretation of what looked so strange, so inexplicable."

Going on his way, he knocked up against Mr. Fritchard, the Vicar, a dark, clean-shaven young man with an eager, intense expression in eyes more expressive than English eyes usually are. Mr. Fritchard was unmarried, and therefore a source of unusual interest to the feminine part of Silverdale. He had confided to the Squire that it was embarrassing for a Vicar to be unmarried; but that, unfortunately for him, he had to resign towards matrimony.

The two men looked at each other. They had a common anxiety. "I have just met Mrs. De Montmorency," said the Squire. "I know," returned the Vicar, with a sigh. "I met her this morning as she brought the flowers for the church. I wanted to tell her to take away her girl. But we are all cowards. These women do not understand their responsibility. By the way, I have made enquiries. The man's name is really Langton. He is quite a fellow. His garden in Chappell Place, W. Such a man does not easily hide himself. He is going about his business as usual. So much I have ascertained indirectly—without letting my informant know why I have interested myself in him and in him on the first possible opportunity."

"Why not today?" asked the Squire. "I've a funeral at two o'clock. Tomorrow is the Bishop's visitation, and can hardly get away before Monday."

"I shall go," said the Squire, on a sudden impulse.

"You?" "I've been meaning to run up and stay a night with the boy. It does me good. He takes me to a theatre, gives me supper, and so on. Sometimes it is a much-chance. You've no idea what a rowdy young fellow he is. I will be sure to forget to be foggy."

"You should be with him often," said the Vicar, whom Hilary had pronounced a man and a brother, although a parson. "You should go yourself, go-a-bye, Merrick. Foggy! Why should you be a foggy? You are a young man still."

The Squire put away the subject of his fogdomy. Of late he had been less content to be a foggy.

"I shall have an early lunch and get the 2.45," he said. "Perhaps I won't spend the night with Hilary, if there is any news. If I have any news I'll run in to you on my way from the station."

"I hope there will be news. By the way, Hilary and Miss South are great friends."

"They have quarrelled about this business. I don't know exactly what it is. Hilary asked Mrs. Langton about this friend of her mother's, and she told him to mind his own business. Perhaps he was a bit diplomatic. The F.O. does not require such delicate diplomatic gifts. The boy was very angry. I don't know how he will take this further development."

"He doesn't know yet," said the Squire. "I have shrunk from telling him. I have hoped every day that the mystery should be cleared up. After all, it depends on my interview with that Mr. Langton whether I see Hilary or not. He can do nothing. What the use of making him unhappy? If I do not come tonight you will know the news is good, or no news."

"Wonder how Sir Gilbert takes it!" "He will see no one. The Vicar, the housekeeper, or no one. I don't know how he seems to require a sort of attachment to the wretched old man, came out on the gravel sweep when I called to say that he was the only one left. His tantrums grow worse and worse," he said. And then, looking out over the park as though he saw nothing, he said in a whisper: "Whoever blames her Ladyship or Miss Margaret, I don't care. I often thought there'd be a murder done. Many's the time I've had to hold the master back. He's strong for all he's so little and so old."

The Squire's face took a study in emotions. "Somebody ought to have killed him. He's like the husband in the 'Ring and the Book.' It would be a righteous act."

He laughed at the startled expression of the Vicar's face as he turned and walked away.

He wondered why he had said all that would tell the 2.45. He was as well have gone up and lunched at the club. He remembered now—he wanted to see Mrs. Bartlett. He felt an interest in the woman as for one he had helped to save just as she was interested in the dog. He was saved from hardship and boarded out where they could have a happy life. He had had his way he would have liked the dog with him, even though they were usually of the wronged breed. But Dash forbade that. Dash was very jealous of his master. His stately gentleness forsook him when it was a question of jealousy. The Squire had in vain tried to correct this failing in Dash, and had at last accepted it. So the morning was spent at cottages round Silverdale common, where they were in touch with the world, and the Squire walked about with Dash at his heels, in solitary state, when there might have been a pack of amiable mongrels.

He was on his way to Mr. Bartlett's. Not far from his own gate he met Dolly Egerton, recognizing her with a quick stir of his pulses, while she was yet at some distance from him. "What is it?" he asked, recognizing a pined misery in her little face, somehow strangely out of keeping with the beautiful morning of June. She looked like a flower dulled by the frost.

"It is Keeper," she said. "I've been up all night with him. Leo's away and Louise is annoyed because he has not come to do the usual things for her and to take Susan out. I've no one to turn to. I hoped I might have found Mr. Cooper. He is no clever about dogs. There is no vet. nearer than Tattleham."

"Let me come. I know something of dogs."

(To Be Continued.)

One Way to Save

Is a Simple Matter if an Organized System is Adopted

The American Bankers' Association have united in an advertising campaign, the expense of which is equally borne by those who take part. The advertisement reads as follows:

"Resolved this first day of January A. D. 1917:

"That I need the assistance of a friendly bank in my efforts to obtain financial success; and

"That I will prove my thrift, by opening a savings account tomorrow (in home town) bank, in which I promise myself to deposit a definite sum of not less than once a month."

"Have you made such a resolution? If not, do it today, and then keep it!"

"We hear a good deal of impracticable discussion these days as to the best way to save. Thrift, of course, is desirable at all times, and especially so at the present. The man who has made a practice of saving part of his income is the one for whom approaching old age has no terrors. But the faddist is abroad. The advocate of the new method is really a very simple matter if an organized system is adopted. Children should receive their first lessons in thrift at home. Give a child a toy bank; let him place in it the pennies which he would otherwise spend on the purchase of comestibles; let him place there anything he is able to earn, and at regular intervals when he has an amount worth while, let him deposit it to his own credit in the regular savings bank. There are reasons in morality, in ethics, and in other branches which it is the duty of the penny bank in school to impart."

Penny savings banks in schools are to be multiplied, and the curriculum that is already too heavy. They are not fair to the teachers or the banks, and create strife and jealousy among the children themselves by making public property of family matters which should be regarded as sacred."

Two children carry money to school, which one of them adds to a dollar, and a social distinction is at once established. One child knows the financial standing of another. The legitimate system of banking enforces the secrecy which is so essential. One half of the world does not know the bank account of the other."

From the Peterborough Review.

Bilkies—Home, they say, in the dearest place on earth. Wilkins—Yes, that's why we quit housekeeping and went to board.

Phenomenal Strides Made by Canadian Northern Railway System in First Year as Transcontinental

New System in the Past Year Carried Approximately 131,000,000 Bushels of Wheat, an Increase of 125 per Cent. Over Previous Year. Company's New Mileage on Pacific Coast and Northern Ontario Makes Astonishing Showing Right From Commencement of Operation. Company's Lines Most Favorably Located.

From Our Own Correspondent

The phenomenal gains that the Canadian Northern Railway reports for its year as a transcontinental line make the statement one of the most important that has ever been issued by any railway in Canada. It is even doubtful whether the tremendous increases in business handled have been duplicated by any system in the world. There are many features to the report that make it of special importance to every Canadian, owing to the interest the country has in the most important that has ever been issued by any railway in Canada. Editor Chronicle.

Dear Sir:—Would you kindly allow me to draw attention to the condition of the road three miles north of town running east. From Stony Creek to Roselund Creek is a regular quagmire now, and has been in a very bad condition for two years, people in this district have no passable road to Crossfield in any direction. We were promised that this road would be fixed last year but it was not, although teams were offered to do the work. Would it not be possible to make a general protest to the Council and have a road of a permanent character made this coming season. I would suggest that we have a standard for making roads, and if help cannot be obtained in the districts where work is to be done, then call for tenders and let the job to contractors. There are gravel pits within easy distance in this district,
Yours,
R. H. HUNTER, RATEPAYER.
